

Basic Rules

To start the game, decide on a movie to watch. Then, choose 10 cue cards that you predict will happen the most often during that movie. Place them face-up in a starting pool in the middle of the table. Then, start the movie.

When the text at the top of a card happens in the movie, be the FIRST person to call out that card to either: claim it from the starting pool, steal it from another player, or defend it from the other players.

📄 When you claim a card it goes into a pool of cards in front of you. That pool is what counts for you to win.

📄 When you steal a card, you take a card from another player's pool and add it to your own.

📄 You defend a card in your pool by calling it out first, preventing other players from stealing it.

The game ends, simply when the movie ends. Whoever has the most cue cards at the end is "The     (Movie's Title)     Champ!" (aka the winner)

Examples

Let's say an explosion happens in the movie.

Claiming cards

Stealing cards

Defending cards

Drinking Rules

Same as the Basic Rules, but even better, we're adding drinks!!!

📄 If you steal a card from another player, that player must take a drink.

📄 If you defend your card from the other players, all players must take a drink. That's right ALL players.

📄 If you claim a card from the starting pool, nobody drinks

If your card causes a player to finish their drink, you can either:

📄 Lock the card by turning it face down. (Locked cards cannot be stolen, defended, or cause drinks).

📄 or Unlock any locked card, so that it can be stolen, defended, or cause drinks again.

At least 3 cards must be unlocked at all times during the game.

Your Choice

---

The cue cards often straddle the line between objective and subjective, this is specifically to encourage conversation about what "counts." So feel free to challenge the cue cards throughout the movie.

Card Challenges

If there is any debate over a card (i.e. whether or not a cue card was actually triggered, or if you were truly the FIRST to call out a card,) then settle it with a classic game of rock-paper-scissors.

The winner must take a drink for each rock-paper-scissors throw used to find the winner.

For example, if you win in 1 throw, you take 1 drink. If you tie for 3 throws in a row and then win the 4th, that's 4 drinks, homie.

The Champ

The reigning Champ of the last game gets some perks in the next one.

- Before the movie starts, you (The Champ) can claim a cue card from the starting pile.
- If a card is stolen from you, the thief must take a drink with you.
- You may choose the winner of any card dispute that does not involve you.
- The Champ shouldn't have to fetch their own drink; you may make another player do it.

Lean In or Lean Back

We get it, sometimes the movie is just so good you get sucked into it. So feel free to just lean back, and enjoy the movie. But remember, while you're leaning back someone else is leaning in to steal your cards. #DontSleep #CardSharks #CueLose
